

The North Star New Year's Poem

Written by Peter H. Reynolds, author of The North Star, these words can be read quietly as the bell strikes midnight... or read aloud to friends... or handwritten and watercolored by your fellow celebrators. perhaps this poem will inspire you to write your own New Year's poem - celebrating new chapters and possibility.

The Beginning

This very moment,
Is a new beginning.

The clock talks.
Every tick, every tock,
saying "now"
"now"
"now"

A new beginning is starting now.

The clock sings,
"Time to begin.
Time to ponder,
Your stars up yonder.
Let them guide
Connected to dreams inside.

The clock strikes twelve,
Reminding ourselves,
of a new beginning.

This very moment
Is a new beginning.
